My exact approach

To building digital authority that wins contracts

Introduction: You're Invisible

You've built something great. Your product is excellent. Your customers love you. You get referrals. You turn away work sometimes.

But here's the problem: In the digital world, you don't exist.

No professional website. No LinkedIn presence. No brand authority. When enterprise buyers search for what you do, they find your competitors—not you.

This isn't a quality problem. Your work is better than theirs. This is a visibility and positioning problem.

The Cost of Invisibility

Every month you stay invisible:

- Your competitors win contracts you should have gotten
- You leave £10k-50k on the table (enterprise contracts vs. small projects)
- Your business stays dependent on word-of-mouth (impossible to scale)
- You can't attract top talent (they don't know you exist)
- You miss partnerships and platform opportunities

The Good News

This gap is fixable. The businesses that win enterprise contracts aren't necessarily better—they're just better positioned and more visible.

In this playbook, I'll show you exactly how I help businesses move from invisible to industry authority. Not theory—real examples, including how I got a luxury furniture brand onto Oblist and 1stDibs, and how I build digital presence that wins enterprise contracts.

Who This Is For:

If you're doing less than £100k revenue, save this for later. Focus on proving your business model first. But if you're at £100k-500k and hitting a ceiling, or if you're turning away work but can't scale—this is exactly what you need.

Why Enterprise Buyers Can't Find You

Let's be clear: enterprise buyers aren't choosing your competitors because they're better. They're choosing them because they look more credible, more established, and less risky.

Here are the five gaps keeping you invisible:

No Digital Presence

The problem: Your website (if you have one) looks DIY. Your LinkedIn is a ghost town. You have no brand materials. When enterprise buyers Google you, they see... nothing professional.

What happens: They assume you're not serious, not established, or too risky. They move on to the next search result.

The fix: Professional website + brand positioning + active LinkedIn presence. Not optional—mandatory for enterprise credibility.

Generic Positioning

The problem: You say "We help businesses with [service]." They say "We help [specific industry] achieve [specific outcome] using [specific method]." Generic loses to specific every time.

What happens: You're one of 500 options. They're the obvious choice for their niche.

The fix: Niche positioning that speaks directly to your ideal client's pain points. (I'll show you mine in Chapter 3.)

No Market Access

The problem: You're not on the platforms enterprise buyers use. You're not in their directories. You're not at their events. You exist in a vacuum.

What happens: They literally never encounter you. You're competing for scraps while your competitors have direct access to decision-makers.

The fix: Get on relevant platforms (like I got VandaVee onto Oblist and 1stDibs). Join industry associations. Attend events. Be where buyers are.

No Social Proof

The problem: You might have 2-3 testimonials buried somewhere. Your competitors have 20+ testimonials, case studies with metrics, and recognizable client logos.

What happens: Enterprise buyers trust "proven" over "promising." Even if you're better, they go with whoever looks more established.

The fix: Build case study repository. Document results with metrics. Get client logos (with permission). Make proof visible everywhere.

No Operational Systems

The problem: Everything runs on founder heroics and gut feeling. You can't explain your process. You don't have documented workflows. Enterprise buyers ask "Can you handle this scope?" and you hesitate.

What happens: They see risk. They worry you'll collapse under pressure. They choose the company with processes and systems.

The fix: Document your processes. Build operational systems. Show you can scale without chaos. (Chapter 2 covers this.)

Key Insight: Enterprise buyers aren't more sophisticated—they're more risk-averse. They choose the "safe" option over the "best" option. Your job is to become the safe option by fixing these five gaps.

The 5 Systems You Need

You can't scale a business held together by duct tape and heroic effort. Before you can credibly pitch enterprise clients, you need these five foundational systems:

1

System 1: Professional Digital Presence

Not just "a website"—a conversion-focused digital presence that positions you for enterprise buyers.

What you need:

- Conversion-focused website (not just pretty—optimized to win contracts)
- Clear positioning (who you serve + what outcome you deliver)
- Case studies with metrics (prove results, not just claims)
- Professional design (signals credibility instantly)
- SEO optimization (so buyers actually find you)
- Clear calls-to-action (calendar booking, not just 'email us')

Why this matters: Enterprise buyers spend 15-30 minutes evaluating your site before contacting you. If your site screams "amateur," they're gone.

2

System 2: Business Architecture

Document how your business actually works so it doesn't depend on you being in every decision.

Critical documents:

- Service delivery workflows (step-by-step SOPs)
- Quality control processes (how you ensure consistency)
- Client onboarding system (repeatable, professional)
- Project management framework (how work gets done)
- Team roles and responsibilities (even if it's you + contractors)

Why this matters: Enterprise buyers ask "How do you ensure quality at scale?" If your answer is "I personally oversee everything," you can't scale.

3

System 3: Growth & Pipeline Strategy

Move from reactive (waiting for referrals) to proactive (generating qualified leads).

Components:

- Ideal client profile (revenue size, industry, pain points)
- Outbound strategy (how you'll reach them)
- Inbound strategy (how they'll find you)
- Lead qualification system (not all inquiries are worth your time)
- Sales process documented (repeatable, not improvised)
- CRM or tracking system (even Notion/Airtable works)

The 5 Systems You Need (Continued)

System 4: Financial Operations

Enterprise buyers want to know you're financially stable and professional.

Minimum requirements:

- Professional invoicing system (not manual spreadsheets)
- P&L statements (at least quarterly)
- Cash flow forecasting (know your runway)
- Contracts and proposals (templates, not one-offs)
- Insurance (professional indemnity, public liability)

System 5: Delivery Capacity & Talent

Can you actually deliver a £100k contract? Prove it.

What you need:

- Core team (in-house or trusted contractors)
- Backup capacity (what if you get sick or overloaded?)
- Skill gaps identified (and plan to fill them)
- Portfolio of work (examples you can show)
- Client success stories (documented results)

Reality Check: You don't need perfection. You need "good enough to be credible." Spending 6 months building perfect systems is procrastination. Spend 2-4 weeks building 80% systems, then iterate as you grow.

How I Position YektaD

Let me show you exactly how I position my business. Then I'll break down why each component works, so you can learn the framework.

My Complete Positioning Statement:

> I help established businesses with proven products but zero digital presence
>
> Who have no professional website, no LinkedIn presence, no brand authority, and no operational systems to scale with speed
>
> Build the brand visibility, operational systems, and market authority they need to compete in their industry
>
> By operating as their fractional Director of Growth & Operations—building their website, positioning their brand, implementing systems, and opening doors (like getting brands into Oblist and 1stDibs) until they're visible and scalable
>
> Unlike traditional consultants who give you a strategy deck and disappear—I execute everything and stay until it works

Why This Positioning Works:

Specific Audience

"Established businesses with proven products but zero digital presence"

This immediately filters out: startups (not established), digitally-savvy businesses (already have presence), and businesses with unproven models. But it includes luxury furniture brands, consultancies, manufacturers, service businesses—anyone who's great at what they do but invisible online.

Specific Problem

"No website, no LinkedIn, no brand authority, no systems"

I list multiple pain points because my ideal clients usually have ALL of these issues. They recognize themselves immediately. It's not vague "want to grow"—it's brutally specific about what's broken.

Specific Outcome

"Brand visibility + operational systems + market authority"

Three concrete deliverables. Not vague "growth" or "success." Enterprise buyers can visualize exactly what they're getting.

Specific Method

"Fractional Director who executes—website, positioning, systems, doors (Oblist/1stDibs)"

I explain HOW I'm different (fractional Director, not consultant) and give concrete proof (Oblist, 1stDibs). This isn't theory—these are platforms I've actually gotten clients onto.

Unlike Alternative

"Unlike consultants who give you a deck and disappear"

Calls out the main competitor weakness and positions my strength. I don't just advise—I execute and stay until it works.

How I Show Up Differently:

- I execute, not just consult. I build your website, document your systems, write your positioning, open doors, handle logistics. I don't give you a deck and disappear.
- I'm all-in or nothing. If I don't see the vision for your brand, I won't take your money. I only work with businesses I believe in. I turn down 60% of inquiries.
- I operate as your Director, not your contractor. You're hiring me for my judgment and execution speed. If you want to micromanage every decision, we're not a fit.
- I'm brutally honest. No sugar-coating. No false promises. If marketing isn't working and operations can't fix it alone, I'll tell you. One hand can't clap.
- I focus on results, not hours. Getting you from invisible to visible takes time and strategy. I stay until it works.

Case Study — VandaVee Luxury Furniture

Let me show you exactly what "building visibility" looks like in practice.

The Business

VandaVee: A UK luxury furniture brand with exceptional Italian craftsmanship. Beautiful bespoke pieces for high-end residential and hospitality clients. Great product, loved by their customers. But completely invisible in the digital world.

The Problem

- Zero professional digital presence (basic website, no brand positioning)
- Locked out of premium marketplaces (Oblist, 1stDibs)
- No operational systems for international exhibitions
- No expertise in customs, ATA Carnet, international logistics
- All growth from word-of-mouth (impossible to scale)
- Enterprise buyers couldn't find them online

What I Did (As Director of Operations & Growth)

I didn't just consult—I executed everything:

Digital Presence & Brand Positioning

- Built professional conversion-focused website with luxury positioning
- Optimized SEO to attract high-end buyers and design trade
- Created all brand materials and marketing collateral
- Positioned for enterprise hospitality clients (Four Seasons, Mandarin Oriental)

Market Access & Premium Partnerships

- Secured partnership with Oblist (luxury furniture platform)
- Got brand accepted to 1stDibs (premium marketplace)
- Opened doors to high-end buyers previously unreachable
- Negotiated favorable positioning on both platforms

International Exhibition Operations

- Negotiated exhibition discounts for Maison&Objet Paris
- Handled entire ATA Carnet process (temporary import/export)
- Managed international shipping, customs, and logistics
- Coordinated exhibition setup, hostess hiring, and booth operations

Operational Systems Implementation

- Documented business processes and operational workflows
- Created Certificate of Authenticity system with NFC integration
- Developed furniture finishing guidance and quality standards
- Built scalable operations to replace founder chaos

VandaVee Results & Key Lessons

The Results

Metric: Digital Presence

Before: Basic site, no authority

After: Professional, featured on premium platforms

Metric: Market Access

Before: Word-of-mouth only

After: Oblist + 1stDibs partnerships

Metric: International Reach

Before: UK local only

After: France exhibitions + global shipping

Metric: Brand Authority

Before: Unknown in industry

After: Positioned as luxury brand

Metric: Operations

Before: Founder chaos

After: Systems-driven scalability

Key Lessons

Execution beats strategy. Getting into Oblist and 1stDibs required actually doing the work—applications, negotiations, persistent follow-ups. Not just 'having a plan.'

One hand can't clap. Marketing without operations fails. Operations without marketing stays invisible. Everything must work together.

Digital presence is non-negotiable. No matter how good your product is, if enterprise buyers can't find you online with professional positioning, you don't exist to them.

Systems enable scale. Moving from founder chaos to documented processes was essential for handling international exhibitions and premium partnerships.

Authority takes time. Building brand authority and market access isn't a 30-day sprint—it's strategic, sustained effort over months.

The Bottom Line: This is what fractional Director-level execution looks like. Not just advice. Not just a strategy deck. Actually building the digital presence, opening the doors, implementing the systems, and handling the logistics that transform invisible businesses into industry players.

Next Steps: Let's See If We're Aligned

If you've made it this far, you're serious about moving from invisible to visible. Here's how we can work together.

Book a Strategy Call

I offer a free 30-minute strategy call where we'll:

- Audit your current positioning and visibility
- Identify the biggest gaps keeping you invisible
- Give you a custom roadmap (even if you don't hire me)
- Determine if we're a good fit to work together

I'll be honest about whether we're aligned. If we're not a fit, I'll tell you and point you toward someone who might be better suited for your needs.
